

Naval War College Monterey Workshop

Faculty and Students are invited

“Insights from a Decade of Campaign Analysis, Wargaming, Fleet Architecture Studies, and Tactical Analysis
at the Naval Postgraduate School”

by

Professor Jeff Kline

Captain USN (Retired) and Professor of Practice
Naval Postgraduate School

Friday, 6 May 2016

1200-1330 in Ingersoll Hall, Room 122

Given in April to the Washington D.C. Strategic Discussion Group, this talk will present the methods used and major trends discovered of over ten years of warfare analysis from theses, capstone classroom projects, faculty research projects, wargaming, and seminars at the Naval Postgraduate School. It will discuss how the missile and robotics age provides enablers for both friendly and potential adversary forces and how “Blue” forces responded to an increasing challenging sea and air denial capabilities from “Red”.

Professor Kline served in the Navy for 26 years and is now a faculty member in the NPS Operations Research Department. His distinguished naval career includes commands of the USS Aquila and the USS Cushing. He has served as a naval analyst in the Office of the Secretary of Defense and earned numerous awards for teaching and research while serving at the Naval Postgraduate School. He has degrees in Industrial Engineering, Operations Research, and National Security Strategy.
